Governor Hyrum Johnson Opens Progressive Campaign in Utah.

"There is a revolution coming in the United States. It will not be a battle of guns, bayonets and swords, but of ballots, and when the final test comes it will show that the American people are true to their tradition of being independent."

In these few words Governor Hiram Johnson of California, candidate for vice president on the Progressive ticket, expressed himself when he arrived in Salt Lake City on Wednesday morning.

The fighting governor of California also had some other things to say; he shot his sentences in a way that kept the newspaper men busy.

"I have left California for a month because I hope to carry the California doctrine to the people of the nation."

"The fundamental principle of the coming struggle will be social and industrial justice—humanity."

"The fact that there is a possibility of Roosevelt's being elected is shown in the panic and terror of Penrose and all of his kind in the nation. These men are making their fight against Roosevelt because they do not want the people to rule. They fear that if Roosevelt is nominated he will insist on the enforcement of the law, not for the trusts, but for the common people."

"Roosevelt will carry California; he will also carry Pennsylvania, New York and several other eastern states, together with many of the western states which are still in doubt. From the best information that I can secure we are gaining strength in every state in the nation. I am in this fight for the masses and not for the classes."

"Frankly, I am glad to be in Utah, and I want to tell the people of this state tonight what I think and why I have taken the stand I have. Utah has a record of being progressive in everything but politics. Why not in politics?"

His talk in the evening in the Salt Lake Theatre, which was crowded to its very doors, was one of the greatest political addresses ever made in the state, is the opinion of men from this city who heard him.

Every word was followed in close attention by the audience, whose interest he held for an hour and a half.

In his opening remarks Gov. Johnson said:

"I have been told that Utah is singular in politics. In 1856 you will remember that some of the Whigs of the country, as exemplified by Mr. Fillmore, were unable to realize that the people had turned from them to the new Republican party until the election was over and they had found that they had carried only one state in the union, Maryland. This year Utah has been designated by some as the Maryland of the Republican party. I do not believe the statement. I believe that in Utah there is just the same love of freedom and humanity that there is in every other western state. I believe that Utah will answer to the call, just as my own state of California out on the shores of the Pacific is responding to it. I know not of some of the states of the east, but it will be my pleasure to go into them and tell them of the lessons we have learned out in the west."

Gov. Johnson's speech was a masterpiece of logic and eloquence, and it was a great success. The audience was so large that many people were turned away from the doors.
